Communion Reflection

There are three possible levels of communication between a husband and wife.

The first is really no communication at all. Though they are physically close, their minds and hearts never meet. They are like shells on a shore.

The second is a superficial level. They make polite but meaningless noises to each other. They never talk about their feelings, and rarely give each other signs of affection.

The third is real communication. They are not afraid to show each other that they are full of fears and anxieties, that they are deeply wounded by sin and selfishness. It is only when we reveal our wounds to someone who accepts us that healing can happen and we can grow.

Love is something we have to learn. The road from egoism to love is a long and sometimes hard one. But it is immensely rewarding.

A marriage without love is like a summer without the Sun.

Lord, teach us how to love.
